HAPPY THANKSGIVING!

FROM THE PRESIDENT
George Ferrari

Hello IWPA members,

Welcome to fall, the leaves are turning and the weather is frightful. I can tell you that we are tired of all the rain we have been having in eastern Washington. A lot of cities have set new records or about to, for the month of October.

Soon we will hear about the championship location. This year we reach a milestone in celebrating IWPA's 25th year of Championship competition.

Hope you all have a great season and strive to make this year better for your dogs, and your families.

The Pres,

George

FROM THE CHAMPIONSHIP CHAIR

Valarie Thawley

A bid for the 2016 -2017 IWPA Championship, has been received and accepted. A big Congratulations goes to Marcia Ezell, for putting in the bid for Region 2 (Spokane, WA).

The Championships will be held the weekend of May 6 – 7, 2017, so save the date on your calendars.

More information will be communicated about the Championship throughout our weight pulling season.

Again CONGRATS – MARCIA EZELL (Region 2)

Thank you,

Val Thawley
IWPA Championship Chair

FROM SECRETARY and NEWSLETTER EDITER

Robbie Reed

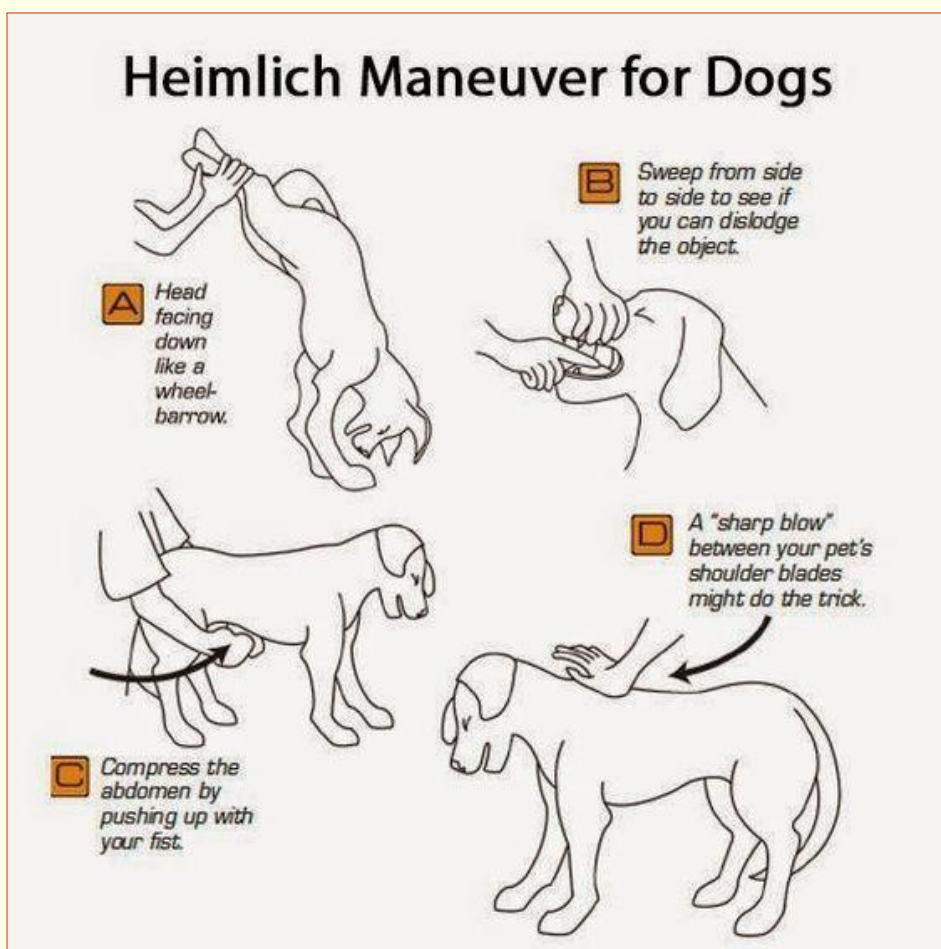

I recently had the misfortune of needing to know what to do when Prince I-Da-Mack was eating and choked on his food. I DO NOT wish for anyone to have to do this. But in the event you are ever in a position to need to do this for one of your beloved four legged kids, I hope this helps you!!

Because Prince I-Da Mack is small enough, I just held him by his chest in the palm of my hand and had his head pointed toward the ground. I was able to apply pressure to his abdomen and then finger sweep his mouth to remove the food as it dislodged.

I am so thankful to have been trained for many years, how to perform the Heimlich Maneuver on infants. The first thing that came to my mind when I realized Mack was choking was, the Heimlich Maneuver for a small dog has to be just like on an infant.

Guess what? It worked!!!

It wasn't until after I had Mack at the vets office, explaining what had happened, did I realize what I had done; saved Prince I-Da Macks life...

Thanksgiving Day Safety Tips

Make No Bones About It

Cooked turkey bones can be a danger to your dog. They're sharp, and potentially very dangerous. You may not know a dog has a turkey bone lodged in your dog's digestive system for days. Don't leave plates with bones lying around. Ditto for the turkey carcass. Hungry dogs have been known to run off with the remains of a carved turkey. It can happen in the blink of an eye. You notice the turkey is gone. You notice the dog is gone. With luck, you find their hiding place before anything happens. Put plates in an unreachable area if you can't dispose of everything properly right away.

Get Them Pooped

A dog who has been on a big walk or fetched the ball a zillion times will be much more likely to run out of energy during the feast than a dog who's been inside all day. A tired dog is a good dog on Thanksgiving. Make sure your pup gets plenty of exercise before the festivities begin.

Don't Feed Something New

Remember, your dogs stomach can get very upset when given a new food or treat. Do not feed them table scrapes from your Thanksgiving feast. Keep in mind some dishes may contain food that are toxic to your dog; like dressing made with onions!

Xylitol Follow-up, 6 more Dangerous (and surprising) Items That Contain Xylitol By Sheryl Franklin (adapted from online articles)

Last year I wrote an article for the newsletter about xylitol in some peanut butters, warning you that it can be fatal to your dogs. Xylitol is a sugar alcohol that is used as a sugar substitute in many human foods (look for the words 'sugar alcohol' on labels, if it's there, avoid it for dogs). But for dogs, xylitol poisoning is a major problem. Ingesting xylitol causes a rapid and massive insulin release in dogs, which will manifest itself outwardly to a pet owner as acute weakness, staggering, and vomiting. Within 15 to 20 minutes, they might even be comatose, and depending on the amount consumed, a dog can also experience liver failure from ingesting xylitol.

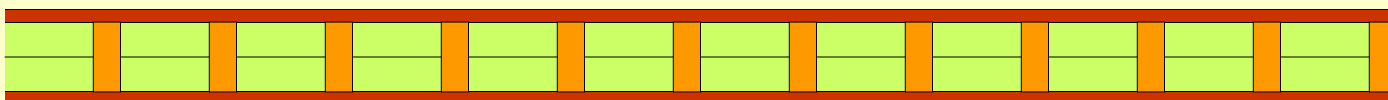

According to the Poison Pet Helpline, cases involving xylitol ingestion are increasing rapidly. In 2009, they were consulted on approximately 300 cases, while in 2015, that number increased to 2,800. Read on for more about what foods xylitol is found in to learn why these cases are multiplying and what you can do to respond appropriately if it happens to your dog.

Xylitol in Gum

If a gum is labeled as sugar-free, that should be a warning sign for xylitol, though various gums can have vastly different amounts of xylitol.

Some gums - like Spry - plainly advertise themselves as containing xylitol because it's good for your teeth and for diabetics. Stride, Trident, and Orbitz are other gums containing differing amounts of xylitol. It's critically important to know what kind of gum was ingested, how much your pet has ingested, and how long it's been since he or she ingested it in order to appropriately treat the problem.

Most dogs hospitalized, were usually hospitalized for about 18 hours. Dextrose is typically administered as quickly as possible in order to bring the canine's blood sugar up. As long as liver health appears normal, once they regain the ability to regulate their blood sugar levels by themselves, dogs are weaned off the dextrose and eventually released.

Xylitol in Mouthwash and Toothpaste

While not usually containing the same levels of xylitol as gum, dental health products tend to use this sugar substitute because of its appealing, sweet taste and its teeth-strengthening, plaque-fighting properties.

The Pet Poison Helpline cites gum as the source of nearly 80% of cases involving xylitol. While gum manufacturers have the options of using other sugar substitutes, like erythritol and Stevia, xylitol is the only one experts know of that causes such adverse reactions in canines. Manufacturers of dental health products aren't facing the same scrutiny as the food industry, meaning their share of xylitol cases may increase in the coming years.

Xylitol in Baked Goods

Because packaged xylitol can be bought in bulk at many food stores, baked foods are becoming a more common source of canine health emergencies. You might find some already-made baked goods containing xylitol at bakeries and specialty stores. And because cupcakes and cookies have a lot more sweetener in them than mouthwash, a pet that consumes a baked good packed with xylitol is in danger of facing a life-threatening situation.

You need to call your vet or the Pet Poison Helpline immediately. Give them as much information as you can. Depending on the severity, they may suggest feeding your dog syrup or honey - something sweet to help keep their blood sugar up temporarily while you drive to seek emergency help.

Xylitol in Sugar-free Groceries

Xylitol is found in trace amounts in many fruits and vegetables, but because it's occurring naturally and in such small amounts in these cases, it's hardly ever a problem for pets.

On the other hand, many grocery stores have started carrying sugar-free foods like ketchup, peanut butter, protein bars, pudding, and more that contain xylitol as one of their primary ingredients. There is a brand called Zapp! that manufactures condiments, sauces, and other groceries that are marketed primarily on their being made with xylitol. In this case, it's very clearly labeled, but in most other instances, you'll need to check the ingredients list on the label to know if something sugar-free is made with xylitol or some other substitute. And in some cases, products that are not labeled as sugar-free still contain xylitol. It is important to always carefully read the entire ingredient list of any food before giving it to your dog.

Xylitol in Medications

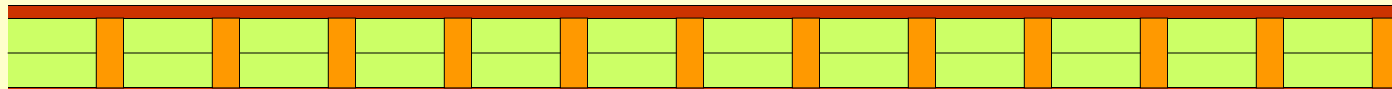

Most medications that contain xylitol are of the "meltaway" variety. These accounted for 12 percent of xylitol cases referred to a veterinary emergency facility, according to the Pet Poison Helpline - the second most behind gum.

You also might see xylitol in some medications containing melatonin, liquid prescription products, and gummy vitamins.

Xylitol in Lotions, Gels, and Deodorants

Xylitol has humectant properties. This means it can help a product retain moisture, which makes it perfect for products like this.

This is a relatively new development, meaning even many veterinarians aren't aware of the dangers of dogs digesting deodorants - at least when it comes to xylitol. As with everything on this list, it's best to keep such products in a cabinet or on a high shelf - completely out of reach of your four-legged friends.
